

Printing my notes

I kept writing, and the page kept growing. Now it is much longer than a page of A4 paper.

Scaled down to one page, the writing is tiny. Split onto pages, some lines are cut in half, with their top on one page and their bottom on the next one.

The fix: an overlap. The end of each page is repeated at the top of the next one, so that a line that is cut is whole on the next page.

Here is how it looks on paper:

To do:

- an overlap of about two lines
- a margin if the printer cuts the edges of the paper
- print it all on A4

Each page is scaled to the width of the paper, so the writing stays as large as on the tablet, and the strokes stay sharp.

A page that fits stays one page, like the next one.

Done!

P.S. Point at a page on the right to see where it comes from, and click it to scroll there.

A short page

This page is as high as the screen of the tablet, and fits on one page of A4.

Pages like this one are scaled to the width of the paper, like the long page, so that all the pages have the same size of writing.